Some features of the XML for FileMaker version 1.0 for Mac are available in version 1.1. For example: the ability to select/deselect elements by mouse, and the Xpath syntax for filters. See FileMaker Pro Version 1.1 Version 1.1 First release of version 1.1. The first release of FileMaker Pro has many updates and new features including a new folder-based organizational approach. This new approach makes it easy to organize your data into separate folders and sub-folders. With the new folder-based organization, you can access your data faster and more easily. Improvements in FileMaker Pro Version 1.1 is now a Universal Binary. There are no longer 32-bit and 64-bit versions of FileMaker Pro. All Help files have been updated to include explanations of changes in the new user interface. New Features in version 1.1 Folders Data can be organized into folders which are named for their contents. A folder contains all the data items of its name. To access a folder, double click its name on the first sheet of the file. There is no more need to remember the FileMaker Pro URL of the folder. The URL can now be accessed from the Organizer or from the navigation pane of the Library. Create new data types for your needs. For example: A "Person" data type and a "Person" relationship. Create basic set-up data types for new projects. These include "Doors", "Vehicles" and "Address". These data types can be accessed by double clicking their icon. Search results are now displayed as a table. The count of relationships is displayed for each table in the result list. All drag-and-drop operations for data types are supported. A database window can be created with a URL from the Organizer. Filter by any property of any data type in a table. Customize the "Color Designer". Customize the view of a table from the navigation pane of the Library. Customize the "Color Designer". The set-up process is now easier. The set-up process is now easier. The set-up process is now easier. The set-up process is now easier.
